Dear Doctor:

With the recognition of suggestion, or its most intense form hypnotism, as a potent conditioning, anesthetic and therapeutic agent it becomes important that all modern practitioners in dentistry, medicine and surgery have a working knowledge of this amazing science whether their interest be purely academic, in experimental research or its practical application.

As the result of many years practice in the field I am thoroughly familiar with the modern and advanced methods and techniques for the induction, development and termination of hypnosis.

Schedules are now in the course of preparation for fall and winter individual instruction, class instruction and lecture and demonstration appearances for educational and scientific groups. Rates are reasonable and the principles for practical application can be learned in a short period of time.

Your inquiry for further information is invited.

There is nothing I can add to the very gracious comments concerning my work which appear in the accompanying reprint from the [redacted]
